LOGLINE: Returning home thirty years after the disappearance of her kid sister, Tannis faces her worst nightmare when her sister's spirit makes herself heard.

Of two sisters in a small town, being older by one year, Tannis takes the mom role to heart and takes her work at the post office very seriously, which light-hearted Dawn refuses to be bothered by when she comes in. Tannis does paperwork and tidies behind the wicket while the postmaster possessively watches Dawn sweep the floor.

Dawn goes to the store while Tannis goes home. When Dawn doesn't show and her linebacker boyfriend Keith comes to pick her up, they go to the bar to report Dawn missing to the Sheriff. The Sheriff sends her home to wait for Dawn.

Come autumn, Dawn is still missing, heartbroken Tannis packs up and leaves town. Returning after thirty years, Tannis hires two teens, Keith's able-bodied son Alan and Merry's mouse-like son, Bail to help her convert the old post office into a café/gift shop.

When a weird pinkish stain runs up the post office wall into the upstairs bedroom, Keith shores up the foundation without noticing the crack. Things start moving from where Tannis put them. A massive shift cracks the wall from the bedroom to the basement. Tannis, Alan and Bail freak.

Keith investigates a bit of bone and cloth sticking out of the wider crack in the basement. As Tannis touches the cloth, the crack bursts open throwing Dawn's remains on top of her. Tannis and Keith know who did it as Dawn is finally laid to rest.
